During the course of the eighteenth century, when the death penalty came to be regarded as too severe a punishment for certain categories of capital offence, there was frequent recourse to the transportation of convicts to penal colonies outside of Britain and Ireland as an alternative. Initially, transportation of convicts was to North America, but after the American War of Independence, New South Wales came to be used as the first Australian penal colony.

Legislation to permit the transportation of convicts from Britain to New South Wales was passed in 1784. Equivalent Irish legislation, enacted in 1786 and with further legislation in 1790 to make transportation from Ireland more effectual, permitted the transportation of convicts from Ireland from 1791.
termination of the transportation system in 1853, some 160,000 persons were transported to Australia, approximately 26,500 of whom left from Ireland.

This list of convicts has been compiled from several record sources from the archives of the former Office of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, the Convict Department of which was responsible for oversight of the transportation of convicts. These are:

Transportation Registers, 1836-1857

When a sentence of transportation was passed on a convict by a court sitting held at the local assizes or quarter sessions, the court officer in each county, the clerk of the crown, was required to furnish details to the government authorities in Dublin Castle, so that arrangements could be made to convey the convict to the port for embarkation on the next available vessel. When the details were received they were entered into registers by clerks in the Convict Department. These details recorded include the convict's name, age, date of conviction, term of transportation, crime, name of trial judge and name of sessions or assizes where tried. The registers also have a remarks column usually indicating the name of the ship on which the convict sailed and the date of sailing, whether the convict was discharged or pardoned, or if the convict died before embarkation. From about 1848, probably due to the increase in numbers receiving such sentences, there is a deterioration in the standard of compilation of the entries in the registers and of the level of detail given, particularly with respect to recording the eventual fate of the convict. They therefore cannot, in this later period, apart from verifying that an individual received a transportation sentence, be cited as proof of transportation. The registers originally spanned the entire period the system was in operation, but those covering the years 1790 to 1835 were destroyed in the fire at the Public Record Office in the Four Courts in 1922.
Where an entry exists in a transportation register relating to a convict, the Record Reference Code in the following list will include the letters “TR” in the citation.

Prisoners’ Petitions and Cases, 1778–1835 and Convict Reference Files, 1836-1853

Petitioning the Lord Lieutenant, who was the Crown’s representative in Ireland and could exercise the prerogative of mercy, was the only real hope of obtaining a commutation of sentence. Petitions, or “memorials”, were prepared by the convict or by a representative and referred directly, in the first instance to the Lord Lieutenant. He then referred them, via the Convict Department of the Chief Secretary’s Office, to the trial judge, the local constabulary and sometimes to the governor of the local gaol to confirm statements made by the convict protesting innocence, age, size of family, or state of health as mitigating factors. All petitions were investigated thoroughly. The accumulations of documents which gathered as investigations progressed are known as Prisoners Petitions and Cases, from 1778 to 1835, and as Convict Reference Files, from 1836 to 1853. Some prisoners' petitions were in the custody of the Public Record Office in 1922 and, like the early transportation registers, were destroyed.

Where a prisoner’s petition or a convict reference file relating to a convict exists, the Record Reference Code in the following list will include the letters “PPC” or “CRF” in the citation.

Free Settlers’ Papers, 1828-1848

This small series, spanning the years 1828 to 1848, contains information relating to the relatives of transported convicts, usually wives and/or children, who were emigrated to join their convict relative at the expense of government. The papers include applications for free passages either from individuals resident in Ireland or from ticket of leave convicts in Australia seeking to have spouses or children join them.
Where papers exist relating to the emigration of a relative of a transported convict, the Record Reference Code in the following list will include the letters “FS” in the citation.

State Prisoners Petitions, 1796-1799 and Fenian Papers, 1867-1868
These two small series of documents relate to individuals who were convicted of treason due to involvement in United Irishmen activities that culminated in the Rebellion of 1798, or who were participants in the Fenian Rising of 1867.

Where papers exist relating a transported convict, the Record Reference Code in the following list will include either the letters “SPP” or “FP” in the citation.

This list of surviving records was compiled in 1988 to celebrate the Australian Bicentenary and microfilm copies of the original documents cited in the list were presented to the Government and people of Australia by the Government and people of Ireland. These microfilm copies are available in the National Library of Australia and in State Libraries.
