July 16th 1932.

Dear Mr. Morris,

Many thanks for your letter, and for trying to make a case for me. It was rather silly of me to make such a fuss about that matter.

The enclosed is a school exercise of Miceal's – evidently an English composition test written when he went to Mr. J. Crowley's school in Clonakilty and initiated by (I think) Mr. Blewett, who was then assistant teacher there. It is a rather ancient document, but I have nothing more recent with a signature, except a few of his letters, which I couldn't part with. You'll find his childish views on warfare quite interesting, and doesn't his spelling at 14 compare favourably with the modern child's?

With best regards,

I am,

Yours very truly,

K. C. Sheridan.
